New Dates and Location Announced for Hart Energy's 2017 Midstream Texas Conference

Third Annual Conference Moves to Midland, TX, at the Heart of the Permian Basin

HOUSTON (January 19, 2017) – Texas is home to the Permian Basin, North America's most active oil-producing region. The Lone Star State also represents nearly one-third of the nation's refining capacity and boasts a second-to-none network of midstream assets. That's why Hart Energy developed its annual MIDSTREAM Texas conference and exhibition, to give industry professionals a comprehensive look at midstream business activity from the state's premier shale plays to its massive Gulf Coast refining complexes. With the resilience of the Permian Basin region, the third annual, state-wide conference will be hosted in Midland, TX and is set for May 23-24, 2017.

Themed "The Heart of the Midstream", the full-day event will address latest challenges and relevant advancements to help lead midstream operators, upstream producers, service and supply companies, financial investors and others navigate changing markets in 2017 and beyond.

"Texas is an essential part of the nation's midstream network and is viewed as the industry indicator for what's ahead," said Paul Hart, Midstream Business editor-in-chief and conference host. "This year's conference is the perfect opportunity for industry executives to discuss how to stay ahead of evolving opportunities and challenges."

This year's conference agenda is filled with keynote presentations, panels and industry spotlights speeches discussing the future of midstream activity across the state. More than 20 executives will discuss growing production and takeaway demand, how downstream business changes affect midstream operations, and Texas' evolving legal and regulatory environment. Attendees also get hands-on product and technology demonstrations on the event's exhibit floor and enjoy 10+ hours of networking opportunities to connect with industry leaders.
